

THE WHITE HOUSE

WASHINGTON

June 29, 1973

Dear Mr. Schlesinger:

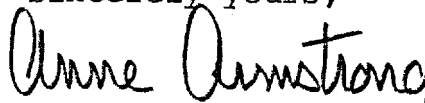

Since you have a continuing interest in the property review program as the head of a Federal land-holding agency, I am enclosing copies of recent announcements concerning the President's Legacy of Parks program and the establishment of the Federal Property Council.

The June 25 announcement of 36 additional parcels of surplus Federal property to be made available for park and recreation use brings to 325 the total number of Legacy of Parks properties since the program was initiated less than two and one-half years ago. I know you join in our pleasure that such progress has been made in this worthwhile program.

The Executive Order establishing the Federal Property Council takes effect July 1, 1973. The Council will, in effect, replace the Property Review Board and take on its functions. In addition, the Council will be responsible for reviewing our Federal real property policies in the light of our overall objectives, and it will recommend to the President necessary modifications.

While I expect that the President's statement and the fact sheet will provide answers to most of the questions you may have, I invite you to contact my office if I can be of further assistance. One of my prime objectives as the new Chairman is to work closely with you and the heads of other land-holding agencies to realize our mutual goal of assuring the highest and best use of Federal properties. I would be very interested in any ideas or suggestions you have concerning the property review program.

Sincerely yours,

Mrs. Tobin Armstrong
Counsellor to the President

Honorable James R. Schlesinger
Director
Central Intelligence Agency
Washington, D. C.

Office of the White House Press Secretary

Sec. 3(a) The Administrator of General Services shall:

(b) The Administrator of General Services shall participate in the deliberations of the Council, where appropriate.

STATEMENT BY THE PRESIDENT
ON FEDERAL PROPERTY COUNCIL

As our people have gradually pushed across our frontiers and our changing way of life has threatened much of America's natural beauty, we have learned at last that our land must be treated as a precious asset.

The Federal Government today bears a very special responsibility for this resource. One third of all the land in the country -- more than 760 million acres -- is now owned by our Government. Of this amount, some 56 million acres have been acquired by the Government by purchase or donation just to carry on its daily activities.

Three-and-one-half years ago, recognizing that we could make more effective use of this irreplaceable heritage and that we have both the opportunity and the need to create more recreational areas, I ordered a review of all Federal holdings. Every agency was asked to determine whether its lands were being well used and to report its findings to the Administrator of General Services.

At the same time, I established a Property Review Board to review the GSA reports and to recommend to me how those properties could be put to better use. It was my intention that the Board would serve as a catalyst in this process and would devote particular attention to identifying lands for recreational uses.

The results of this initiative have been gratifying. Growing directly out of the studies and recommendations was the Legacy of Parks program, under which surplus Federal real property has been made available to State and local governments for parks and recreation, especially near urban areas. In the 28 months since the program was started, 325 properties -- including 36 announced today -- have been turned over for park and recreational purposes. They cover over 54,000 acres and have an estimated market value of about $150 million.

In addition to furthering our environmental and recreational objectives and our commitment to the sound management of our Federal assets, the Legacy of Parks program is a striking example of the New Federalism in action. Resources of the Federal Government are made available to States and localities for a broad purpose -- providing recreational opportunities -- and their local communities through their representatives, decide how they can best develop those resources to meet their own recreational needs.

While our progress under the Property Review Board has taught us that we can make better use of our Federal lands, it has also made it clear that in order to make optimum use of these resources, we must develop a more coherent set of policies for the handling of all Federal properties. In the absence of general guidelines, a Government agency still determines the use and disposition of its holdings solely on the basis of its own mission and without full regard for our broader policies.

Today, in order to foster the development of more effective national policies that apply to all agencies and departments, I am creating a Federal Property Council within the Executive Office of the President.

It is specifically charged with reviewing all Federal real property policies to test their consistency with the overall objectives of the Government and with recommending to me such reforms, modifications, or initiatives as seem necessary.

The Administrator of General Services will continue to conduct surveys of Federal properties, identifying those which he believes can be put to better use and recommending appropriate action. The Federal Property Council will study his reports and will assist in the resolution of any conflicting claims for the use of properties.

The new Council will also assume all other duties of the Property Review Board, including the development of the Legacy of Parks Program. The Board is being abolished.

I have asked Mrs. Anne Armstrong, Counsellor to the President and Chairman of the Property Review Board, to serve as Chairman of the Federal Property Council.

Other members of the Council will include Roy Ash, Director of the Office of Management and Budget; Bryce Harlow, Counsellor to the President; Leonard Garment, Counsel to the President; Herbert Stein, Chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers; William Timmons, Assistant to the President for Legislative Affairs; and Russell Train, Chairman of the Council of Environmental Quality.

THE PRESIDENT'S PROPERTY REVIEW PROGRAM

FACT SHEET

February, 1970

The President ordered a complete review of Federal property holdings in his Environmental Message to Congress:

"I propose that we adopt a new philosophy for the use of Federally-owned lands, treating them as a precious resource -- like money itself -- which should be made to serve the highest possible good."

The President observed that Federal real property:

- is the largest Federal asset, representing one-third of the Nation's geographic area.
- covers 760 million acres in 50 States, in several outlying areas, including Guam, and Puerto Rico, and in 129 foreign countries.
- includes 56 million acres acquired by the Government, of which 1.6 million acres are located in urban areas.

The President issued Executive Order 11508 establishing the Property Review Board, which:

- has identified underutilized Federal property which can be converted to park and recreation uses, particularly in locations close to where people live.
- has considered disputes regarding the utilization of specific Federal parcels and made recommendations to the President as to the use of Federal properties that promise the greatest public benefit.
- has encouraged and arranged for the joint use by the public of Federal properties in order to increase public access for recreational purposes.

October, 1970

A statute proposed in a Presidential Message to Congress and passed on October 22, 1970, enables the Federal Government to convey surplus real property to State and local governments for park and recreation use at up to 100% discounts. In previous surplus transactions, the recipient had to pay 50% of the land's value -- and that was beyond the reach of most communities.

OVER

February, 1971

The President created the unique Legacy of Parks program.

"I have proposed a new 'Legacy of Parks' program which will help States and local governments provide parks and recreation areas, not just for today's Americans but for tomorrow's as well. Only if we set aside and develop such recreation areas now can we ensure that they will be available for future generations."

The Legacy of Parks:

- makes surplus Federal properties available for park and recreation use.
- is the first program of its kind in the Nation's history.
- is aimed at bringing recreation opportunities closer to where people live.

Legacy of Parks Milestones:

- March, 1971: The first Federal property under the Legacy of Parks program, a 128-acre parcel with an estimated value of $1,106,000 was transferred to the County of Nassau in New York State.
- September, 1971: 2,936 acres of Pacific coastline, formerly a part of Camp Pendleton, valued at $20,520,000, was leased to the State of California.
- April, 1972: The 100th Federal property to be made available to State and local governments under the President's program was transferred to St. Bernard Parish in a New Orleans, Louisiana ceremony.
- October, 1972: President Nixon announced the 200th transfer of Federal property to the American people under his Legacy of Parks program.
- October, 1972: State or local governments in all of the 50 States had received land for parks and recreation use.
- June 25, 1973: President Nixon announced the 325th parcel of Federal property for conveyance to the American people under his Legacy of Parks program. These properties now cover almost 54,000 acres and have an estimated market value of almost $150 million.

Federal Property Council

On June 25, 1973, in recognition of the need to ensure that Federal real property policies are consistent with the overall objectives of the Government, the President issued an Executive Order creating the Federal Property Council. In addition to reviewing and developing property policies, the Council takes on the functions previously assigned to the Property Review Board which is abolished by the Executive Order.
